Artwork statement:

'Double D' stand for Dream and Death. It's a cliché story when we start with a life (which from the artist thought was a dream at all) it will end up with a death. Either the death of character, objects, or etc. These artworks were made up using the biggest iconic cartoon's character (Mickey Mouse). The characters of Mickey were recommended as influenced from Disney's world as the good pathway of life and originally with a protagonist but to bold the LOVE. The other way is create the love to sink the hate.

For example, when your life was started you will be served with the challenge (metaphorical thorns) of life. And when your death is come, you will surrounded by the sins and consequences (something that's really hurt and you will ever able to change it in afterlife).
